

JESSICA TAYLOR

Jessica Taylor has been dancing for 14 years, training in all styles, including ballet, tap, jazz, hip hop, lyrical, contemporary and breakdancing. She danced competitively as part of the Essex County Dancers Incorporated for 9 years and travelled with the team to multiple dance conventions across America. Jessica became involved with the Holy Names Knight Breakers in her later high school years. With this group, she trained in breakdancing, hip hop and performance based stunts and competed at the Ontario Dance Fest. She began teaching and choreographing in high school for a variety of school performances and charity fashion shows.

Jessica began her post secondary education to become an English teacher and has completed a variety of placement opportunities in different high schools. Her passions for working with children and the dance industry go hand in hand. More recently, Jessica has been teaching dance to multiple groups of students in a variety of styles. Some of these include ESL students from Columbia, students with special needs, adult classes and other students of all ages. While her main styles are hip hop and breakdancing, she teaches in all styles including heels, jazz funk, K-pop and more.

As a student working to become an educator, her focus is on dance training, as well as being a positive role model for her students. Jessica values the importance of building meaningful relationships with her classes and bettering all aspects of an individual in the ways that she can.
